

BUILDING A SUSTAINABLE FINANCIAL SYSTEM

“To think that the world can even change without changes in our mental models is folly.” – Joseph Jaworski

THE INVESTMENT INDUSTRY NEEDS TO CHANGE – AND RAPIDLY

The investment industry has been overly focused on short-term financial outcomes, paying insufficient attention to the interests of its customers and failing to provide the products and services needed to put sustainability at the heart of financial markets.

The health and wealth of economies, societies and the environment have been negatively impacted by this short-term behavioral trend.

However, there is a growing momentum for change.

THE INTERESTS OF CLIENTS, COMPANIES AND INVESTORS ARE INEXTRICABLY LINKED

Sustainability, as it's becoming truly understood, implies profitability.

Institutional investors have the opportunity to promote the strong purpose of the companies in which they invest and build their cultures firmly in partnership with clients.

RESPONSIBLE INVESTORS WILL:

- Improve the stewardship of investments and the quality of stakeholder relationships;
- Positively influence the policy environment and catalyse change in the financial system;
- Shift focus from short-term transactions to longer-term partnerships;
- Improve the quality of client relationships by building trust and realising the benefits of interdependence.
